Copenhagen, October 20. 'Twas only part of the Squadron, lately fitted out here, which sailed from this Port on the 17th Instant, and they advanced no farther than a Place called the Renne Creutzen, where they are to continue, till the rest of the Danish Men of War which are yet in this Port have joined them. Count Guldenloew is on board this Squadron as a Volontier, it not becoming the Dignity of his Office of High Admiral of this Kingdom to Command so small a number of Ships, and therefore the Sieur Stockens is made Admiral of this Expedition. The Field-Marshal Wedel left this Place this morning, in order to go and review the Danish Forces in Norway, of which he is lately made Commander in Chief. The Duke of Holstein's Forces that are employed in building the new Forts in the Dutchy of Holstein, do use their utmost diligence to finish some of them before Winter, seeing the Season is coming on, which will oblige them to give over this Work till the Spring. 'Tis said, but without any certainty, that the Squadron of Suedish Men of War which lay at Carelscroone, are sailed from thence to Pomeren with the four Regiments of Foot they are to transport to that Country, and that the Danish Squadron commanded by Admiral Stooken, who are supposed by this time to be at Sea, have Orders to observe the Suedes, but not to oppose their transporting any Forces to their own Territories in Germany.
